FOOT SALVE,

The Sure Cure for Corns and Infallible Remedy for Bunions, Sore and Inflamed Joints and Chilblains.

This Salve is the result of years of study and experiments by a distinguished Chiropodist, and we feel confident, in offering it to the public, that it will meet the wants of thousands of people that are afflicted with these most troublesome of diseases—Corns Bunions, and Sore Joints—as every person so suffering can be cured by using this Salve It has an advantage over other preparations of a like nature in the market, that it does not burn the corn out, but it softens the flesh around it, and so separates it that it can be removed without pain or bleeding Persons using this Salve will find it will work as follows

After applying the Salve three or four times a ring will appear around the corn, which indicates that it has become separated from the true flesh and it can now be easily removed, or after another application it will fall off itself For a Bunion, Sore or Inflamed Joint one application will almost entirely remove the inflammation, and if persisted in will surely cure

This Salve will not cure a soft corn, but will remove the inflammation and keep the foot in a comfortable condition

To the Honorable Judge of Probate for the County of Penobscot:

The undersigned, administrator of the estate of Melinda H Antoine, late of Orono in said County deceased, respectfully represents that the goods and chattels rights and credits of said deceased are not sufficient to pay her just debts and charges of administration, and reasonable expenses occasioned by her last sickness by the sum of two hundred dollars her husband not being able to pay the same

Wherefore your petitioner prays your Honor to grant him power to sell by license at public or private sale and convey the whole of the following described real estate of the deceased, (including the reversion of the widower's dower therein,) as the residue would be greatly depreciated by a sale of any portion, viz The late homestead of the deceased in said Orono on the southerly side of Mill Street, being all the real estate of the deceased to satisfy said debts, expenses of sale, and charges of administration, and expenses of last sickness

Said real estate is the same described in a deed recorded in the Registry of Deeds of said County, Vol 403, page 543

FURTHER EVIDENCE OF INTIMIDATION AND FRAUD AT THE POLLING PLACES IN SUMTER COUNTY S C—PROTESTS FROM REPUBLICANS AND TESTIMONY OF UNITED STATES SUPERVISORS

[Cor Boston Advertiser]

WASHINGTON, Nov 27—Immediately after election in Sumter county, S C, all the Republicans united in a protest which was filed with the county canvassers The latter however declined to take any action upon it, and counted all the votes to which objections were made A copy of this protest arrived to day It sets forth in detail the methods of fraud At four precincts enough tissue tickets were secretly put in to the boxes to change the result At four others there was general violence and intimidation and the colored voters were thus prevented from voting Three polls were opened before six o'clock and each of these boxes were stuffed in advance, or a crowd of Democrats present from other parts of the county were allowed to vote At one precinct the Democratic managers deliberately stuffed the box after the close of the polls At one place the Democrats who were absent were allowed to vote by proxy At one precinct upon the close of the polls the Democratic manager substituted a stuffed box for one in which the votes of the day had been recieved This substitute contained a large number of regular Republican ballots with many of the names scratched off and the names of Democratic candidates inserted At one precinct persons under age were allowed to vote by the Democrats At one precinct two hundred and eleven names were added to the poll list after voting hours to tally with the same number of fraudulent ballots put into the box The following extracts from the formal reports of the United States supervisors for Sumter county are fair specimens of many already received Supervisor Andrews at Privateer presents a report that the Democratic managers of election refused to allow him to enter the room where the ballot-box was until after the polls had closed He also reports more votes cast than there were names on the poll list and the finding of tissue tickets when the count was made The following is the report from Providence precinct

NOVEMBER 5 1878

I hereby certify that I started for the above named poll and reached within fifteen or twenty steps of the door of the house in which the ballot-box was about four o'clock in the forenoon this day When I was surrounded by a large crowd of white men who were unknown to me and prevented me from reaching the poll till after some 150 to 200 white men had voted The poll was opened before six o'clock, and the managers refused to allow me to enter the house till long after sunrise and after the above number of voters had voted and rode off All these parties were strange men in our neighborhood I was denied the privilege of taking the names of voters from the poll list A large number of tissue paper tickets were found in the ballot box that I believe to be illegal votes All were Democratic tickets

J J McCREA U S Supervisor

Supervisor Singleton at Swimming Pens precinct Sumter county reports as follows

I hereby certify that there were 158 more ballots in the ballot box than there were names on the poll list at the close of the polls and that there were in said ballot box two or three packs of tissue tickets stuck and packed together in such a manner as to make it impossible for them to have been voted by legal voters who voted at said precinct They could not have got into the box by being put into it by or with the knowledge and consent of the managers of the election at said precinct The said tissue ticket all had the name of the Democratic candidate for Congress printed on them At the opening of the polls I demanded the privilege to look into and examine the ballot box, to see that it was clear of tickets but managers N S McLeod, A H Martin and J E Pembert refused and denied me that privilege I was also denied the privilege to take such a position at the polls as to enable me to see the voters when they voted I could not keep the poll list of voters in consequence thereof

Supervisor Murray at Spring Hill precinct says there were cast 260 votes for congressman at this poll There were found on the opening of the ballot-box and comparing the votes therein with the poll list of the managers as well as my own 137 more ballots than there were names on the poll list These ballots were fraudulent tickets, known as kiss or tissue tickets included in other tickets These tissue tickets were all democratic There was no violence at the polls that I saw.

THE SOUTH CAROLINA DEMOCRATS

WASHINGTON Nov 18 Private advices from Charleston show that the Democrats there are preparing a criminal case against Judge Mackey, as the best method of meeting the charges in his letters concerning the election frauds. The charges now brought were first made by the Democratic committee of the Charleston council, which worked five months attempting to blacken the characters of the previous Republican council which had been elected largely by the help of independent Republican voters. The charges brought against Mackey by the committee were fully and satisfactorily answered by him immediately on their appearance Upon a published statement that he is now to be indicted on these charges, he appeared in court last week and asked the Judge and solicitor in the presence of the grand jury, to have all the papers in the case which have been turned over to the solicitor sent at once to the grand jury, with the bill of indictment, so that the trial could proceed at once In spite of all Mackey could do, by agreeing to waive all preliminary steps and go to trial immediately, his proposition was refused The delay, as is well understood, is for the purpose of giving the Democrats time to investigate the false charges as a means of breaking the force of his letter, and also to weaken him in the contest he has decided to make for the seat out of which he was defrauded.

Representative Rainey has arrived here, and gives a graphic account of the Democratic frauds in his district. They agree with the most extreme statement yet made, and in some cases exceed any yet received. For instance, at one poll enough ballots were stuffed in by the Democrats before opening the poll to carry the election, and the Republicans were allowed to do the voting through the day, and at the close all their ballots were found by themselves on top A plan not yet reported was tried in some of the strongest Republican precincts of his district. One of the Democratic managers at each purposely failed to qualify, and after the election the whole vote was rejected on account of this informality Mr Rainey says the feeling is strong among the colored Republicans that unless some means could be devised to protect their race in exercising the rights of suffrage they preferred not to make an attempt to vote hereafter

THE VOTE OF MAINE

The Republicans of Maine had a plurality of 17 000 at the September election, and yet as our Constitution requires an absolute majority to elect a Governor the result has been spoken of as a Republican defeat but as victories are rated and counted in other States we are forced to believe that we had a substantial triumph in Maine Neither in New York Pennsylvania or Ohio did the Republicans have a reliable majority of all the votes cast and in none of them was the Republican plurality so large in proportion to the total vote as in Maine But in those States a plurality elects and had the same rule applied in Maine we would have been credited with a great Republican victory

MR EVARTS

Secretary Evarts concedes that it is imperative that the officers selected to enforce the laws for the protection of the political rights of citizens should be men who heartily sympathize with the spirit and purpose of the laws Secretary Evarts is a famous lawyer and we ask him if the plainest application of his logic would not show that a person who regards the adoption of the Great Constitutional Amendments as a mistake is poorly qualified for chief counsellor of an Administration entrusted with the maintenance of those Constitutional guarantees? We do not remember that any person holding eminent position in the Republican party, has ever before publicly questioned the wisdom and justice of the amendments establishing liberty and equal rights throughout the American Republic and Mr Evarts does not seem to appreciate the fact that he antagonizes the record the principles and the sentiments of the Republican party Either by intention or inadvertance Mr Evarts seems to have exposed the roots of the policy of conciliation by surrender to the proscriptive demands of the "White League" element in the South

DIFFERENT OPINIONS OF BULLDOZING

The greater the scoundrelism so that it be committed in the interest of the Democratic party the more eager the Bangor Commercial is sure to be in its defence—While the monstrous frauds at the late election in South Carolina are so notorious and so completely established by Democratic testimony the Commercial rushes forward to deny them with the most stupid argument we have yet seen advanced It says that because there was a marked change in the vote of Maine at the recent election there is as much reason for charging intimidation and fraud here as in South Carolina! That is weighty logic to set up against the cumulative evidence of Rifle Club raiding and tissue-ballot-stuffing in South Carolina The Democratic vote in Penobscot County for Governor in [illegible] was [illegible] while in 1878 the Democratic candidate for Governor received but [illegible] votes but nobody charged intimidation or bulldozing because the result was not brought about that way—In South Carolina the charge is made because it is a shameful and palpable fact that few intelligent Democrats attempt to dispute As the Commercial declares that we are trying to humbug the Greenback Republicans by waving the bloody shirt and denies that there has been any political outrage at the South we quote the very decided opinion of Hon Joseph L Smith the Greenback candidate for Governor as expressed on this point to a representative of the Lewiston Journal in an interview last week

> In parting we asked Mr Smith how he regarded the reported change of policy in regard to the South by the President The Major's eyes flashed a little at this He spoke very feelingly of the election outrages at the South where men were murdered for merely exercising their privileges as citizens and said some means could be devised by the general government to punish these outrages and gross violations of the laws of the United States that blood and treasure should be spent to protect a citizen at home as well as abroad and if we have not power to punish power should be given or taken It is not well to rest easy under such enormities

WHAT IS TO BE DONE ABOUT IT?

[From the Providence Journal]

The circumstantially detailed story which comes from Orangeburg South Carolina is well calculated, even with all our familiarity with the audacity and cruelty of the Democracy of the State to cause one's blood to tingle with shame and indignation Nothing hardly could be more disgraceful, nothing more deserving the immediate and effectual attention of the United States government Whether Keitt is considered as a citizen or as an United States official, there cannot be the slightest excuse for the savage assault upon him and as Deputy Marshal he is entitled to have his assailants punished at whatever cost, and whoever they are If at the moment he was not in the line of his official duty, he was almost murdered, because of the arrest of those who had impeded him in the privilege which, according to the law of South Carolina, attaches to every citizen and as it appears in his duty as Marshal. However the mere technicalities may be, he is an officer of the national government This was his offence in the first place he asserted his rights as against those who had interfered with him illegally The Democracy of South Carolina not content with having established a despotism over the people of the State has declared by its acts that no official of the United States shall live safely there if he insists either upon his rights as an individual or asserts his legal status as under the national law We are told that such cases must go unpunished, because witnesses will not appear If such is the fear of the Ku Klux that the truth cannot be had in the courts, it is time that the federal power made itself at least an object of respect

There being not the slightest doubt about the defiance, the violation, of the present annulment of the Constitution in South Carolina, it is a pregnant question what is to be done about it. If nothing, then the sooner we all prepare to defend ourselves by the strong arm the better, if the dignity and sovereignty of the nation are to be maintained, then there must be no delay in appealing to the law. If by hook or by crook justice is hindered in the Southern States, where these outrages have been committed, the knowledge that anarchy, riot, assassination and the rule of the bowie knife and revolver cannot be put down nor punished, will lead to the assertion of the supremacy of law by the Northern people in such manner that such a state of things will be reversed. The South will not be permitted to go on in this manner long. If the statutes are not now strong enough, they will be made stronger, if the South can as yet intimidate witnesses, the way will be found to protect them This business of rebellion is to be crushed out. The North has been patient, the administration has been deliberate, but the same love of right which animated the people of the North in 1861, and through the bloody years of the civil war, will demand that the citizen in South Carolina shall not be butchered because he has political opinions, or possesses a commission from the general government. It is the same old sowing of the wind, if continued it needs no prophet to tell what the harvest will be

RESUMPTION ASSURED

[Special Cor New York Times]

All doubts as to the ability of the Government to resume specie payment on January 1st have vanished Even Judge Kelley is reported to have withdrawn his opposition to resumption, and is represented as having expressed an anxiety to see the "experiment" tried, and to have given utterance to a prayer for its success With an abundance of coin on hand to meet all demands for redemption that can be made, with public confidence fully restored, and with ample facilities at the command of the Secretary of the Treasury to replenish his coin supply, resumption cannot fail, unless Congress, by unwise legislation, should interfere There is, fortunately, very little danger of Congressional interference to prevent or retard resumption, for the reason that the opposition in Congress is too weak and public sentiment in favor of that measure is too strong for any movement to be attempted against carrying out the plighted faith of the Government to the people Every arrangement has been made by the Treasury Department to begin the work of redemption, and the following figures show approximately, what the coin resources of the Government will be on the 1st day of January next Referring to the analysis of the public debt statement for October 31st, published November 2d it will be seen that the actual coin balance then in the Treasury, after deducting all current coin liabilities, was $142,710 [illegible] The coin receipts from Customs for the months of November and December will be about $18 500 000 that being in round figures the amount received for Customs duties for the corresponding two months of last year There will be received also during November and December, from the Mints, at least $4 000 000 in standard silver dollars, and about $600,000 in subsidiary silver coins Gold bullion is now being purchased by the Government on the Pacific coast on a par with legal tenders, the amount thus purchased being about $20,000 per week. The total coin liability of the Government for interest on the public debt for the months of November and December will be about $9,279 330 To this should be added $5 500,000 required to pay the British Government on account of the Halifax award, which will make the actual coin liabilities between now and January 1 $14 779 330. Omitting the amount of gold bullion that will be purchased for greenbacks on the Pacific coast, the coin resources of the Treasury on January 1st, as will be seen by the figures given above, will be about $165 8[illegible]0 293, which will give a net coin balance available for resumption purposes on the 1st day of January of $151 030 963, a sum nearly equal to 50 per cent of the entire legal tender liability But the Treasury will be even stronger than is indicated by the foregoing figures, because at least $100 000,000 in greenbacks are in the vaults of the Treasury and in hands of Government disbursing officers, which reduces the legal tender liability by that amount, because that amount being already held by the Government cannot, of course be presented for redemption Secretary Sherman believes that $50 000 000 in United States notes cannot be collected for presentation for redemption and if they could the withdrawal of that amount from business for three days would have a tendency to create a scarcity that would place legal tenders above gold. Thus it will be seen, the Treasury is abundantly prepared to redeem the promise given by the act of March 18, 1869, that "the faith of the United States is solemnly pledged to make provision at the earliest practicable period for the redemption of the United States notes in coin"

HOME AGAIN

[From the Lowell Courier]

The conclusion come to by the Administration that bulldozing cannot be overcome by compliments, is one that was reached by a good many Republicans before the complimenting begun And this was especially true in the neighboring State of New Hampshire, whose recent campaign has been carried on with especial reference to the duty of the party in maintaining its record as the champion of equal rights as to the question of honest money The Concord Monitor, under the stalwart management of brother Stevens, has carried the colors of the party always far in advance, and has never allowed them for one moment to droop The Monitor, while recognizing the importance of the financial issue, has always placed the cardinal principle of Human Rights first, and asserts that much of the effectiveness of the battle was due to those who emphasized this issue There are not a few eminent men in Massachusetts who insist that the Republican party here needs to brace up on this question And if things go on at the South as they have been going on this fall, this bracing up will be a natural consequence Even the Boston Herald, and Springfield Republican are forced to admit "stalwartness" is at least a venial sin, while the Journal and Advertiser are ready to condone it altogether. We confess to a good deal of admiration for men who, like brother Stevens do not cut their views to the prevailing fashion, but stick to the right, and in the end see all the errant brethren flocking back to the old ground "like doves to their windows" So long as equal rights need to be preached so long the Republican party of glorious history will continue the missionary work. The people will always be found true, let the politicians wander as they may. And having scotched, if not killed, the flat snake, we can safely turn once more to the question of justice and equality, with the assurance that on it we are bound to conquer.

The Tribune's Washington special of Monday says "The President told a gentleman yesterday that he should make the Southern question a leading feature of his message, and should dwell especially upon the necessity of enforcing the XIVth and XVth Amendments. The President is also understood to have said that he finds that in many respects in its judgment of the South, the majority of his own party was right and he himself was wrong." Referring to Mr Evarts' labored effort to prove that abandonment of old methods and adoption of new is not a "change," the Tribune neatly remarks:

Mr. Evarts insists that the Administration has not changed its policy because it had none to change. Well, then—if the Administration will have it so—the people are mightily pleased with the way the policy wasn't changed!

Vice President Wheeler says the exposure of the cipher villany by the N. Y. Tribune was largely instrumental in causing the Republican successes in November.

WHAT CONSTITUTES A "CHANGE."

We thought that our friends of the Boston Journal could accomplish the feat—if anybody could—of reconciling the praise of the President's reported fraud admission that his Southern policy had not proved a success, with indorsement of his later declaration that he has made and shall make no change in his policy. The following extracts from an editorial of Tuesday will show how neatly our Journal friends have fixed the matter

> Because President Hayes has discovered and admitted that his conciliatory policy toward the South has failed to produce the results he hoped it is assumed by some of our contemporaries that he regards his whole action in that direction as faulty. It is due to the President to say that he has nowhere made any such admission or expressed a purpose to change the essential features of his policy In so far as he has tried to gain the good will and co-operation of Southern leaders by making local appointments in accordance with their suggestions and by taking care not to offend them by appointing objectionable men to local Federal offices, it is very probable that he may make a change, since it must be obvious to him that such favors have not been appreciated Furthermore, if, for the cultivation of kindly feeling between local authorities in the South and the Federal Government, leniency has been extended to those who were charged with breaking Federal laws it is safe to say that such a line of action will be abandoned now that the Administration sees that such well intended mercy has been without influence for good
> What the President will do now that he is convinced that his friendly overtures have not been reciprocated we cannot tell We presume however, that he will, as far as possible bring to punishment those men who have by fraud and intimidation violated the laws of the United States, that he will show no more leniency to violators of the revenue laws, and no longer consult the wishes of the Democratic leaders of the South who could, if they would but exert themselves do much to break up that system of intimidation and fraud which made the recent elections throughout the South a farce, and which have obliterated Republican forms of Government in that section

Well, if the purposes stated above do not constitute a "change," we may certainly regard them as very healthy symptoms

FOREIGN NEWS.

GERMANY.

Prussian Finances.

LONDON, Nov. 20. At the opening of the Prussian Parliament yesterday Count Stalberg Wernigerode, Vice Chancellor, said the Government relies upon the co-operation of the Chamber for the removal of financial difficulties. Last year's surplus, he said, would be almost entirely required to cover the increasing contributions of Prussia toward the German Exchequer and interest on the public debt would likewise be considerably increased, and there are other unavoidable expenses, unless important interests are to be neglected. He said retrenchment would be almost impossible. The revenue is insufficient to cover the ordinary and regular expenditure of the State, and the means required to amend this state of things will be found in taxes and imports handed over to the German Exchequer. Meanwhile the current expenditures will have to be partially defrayed by loans.

The deficit is stated to exceed seventy million marks and but for the last remnant of the French indemnity being distributed in 1876, it would have occurred a year ago. It is mainly occasioned by the steady increase of military expenditures, accompanied by a decrease of indirect taxes and the proceeds from Government railways, mines and forests. The exact figures of the deficit is still unknown, but the total result strongly contrasts with the gratifying aspect of the Prussian Budget for so many years past.

ITALY.

The Examination of Passanente.

ROME, Nov. 20. Passanente, the would-be-assassin of King Humbert manifested perfect unconcern and brutal self assurance while undergoing his preliminary examination. It is evident he had calmly meditated the act, and fully made up his mind to the consequences. At one point in the examination when the Magistrate expressed horror at the prisoner's deed the latter said. "It seems to me you are getting too excited." On being asked if he had not observed that the people would have torn him to pieces but for the police he replied. "The people are fools, they always act that way." To the question as to whether he had intended to kill the King or merly to wound him he answered, "My intention was to finish him." He said he was neither an Internationalist nor Socialist, that he did not know the meaning of those words, but he failed to satisfactorily account for the Internationalist work found in his possession. The King will confer the collar of the Annunciata upon Signor Cairoli.

ENGLAND AND AFGHANISTAN.

"Forced Into War."

"The Advance Probably Begun."

The First Estrangement From England.

LONDON, Nov. 20. The Government has published a long despatch from Lord Cranbrook, Secretary of State for India, to Lord Lytton, Viceroy of India, recapitulating the negotiations with Afghanistan. The despatch traces the first estrangement between England and the Ameer of Afghanistan to the refusal of the Gladstone Government in 1873 to give a definite answer as to how far they would help him if he was threatened by Russia. The despatch points out that on the accession of the present Government the relations of England with Afghanistan had to be considered with reference to the rapid march of events in Turkistan, consequently Lord Lytton was sent to India, he was intrusted to offer the Ameer the protection he previously solicited:

Namely substantial pecuniary aid, the recognition of his Dynasty and pledge of material support against unprovoked foreign aggression, conditionally on the Ameer allowing the British agents to have access to the positions in his treaty (except Cabul) where they could acquire trustworthy intelligence of the events likely to threaten the tranquillity and independence of Afghanistan. Such access was necessary as substantial proof of the unity of of the Ameer's interest with those of Great Britain.

The Policy of Inaction.

The despatch then narrates the abortive ending of the missions of Col. Sir Lewis Peely and General Sir Neville Chamberlain, which were undertaken in pursuance of these instructions, and shows that the latter was suggested by Lord Lytton, who thought that after the ostentatious reception of the Russian mission, the policy of inaction was no longer tenable and that the refusal of the Ameer to receive a British mission was improbable and would be inexcusable. The despatch concludes by stating the namely: a full and suitable apology within a given time, the reception of a permanent British mission and amnesty to the tribes who escaped the British Envoys. The Ameer has been informed that unless a clear and satisfactory reply is received by Nov. 20th the Viceroy will be compelled to consider his intentions hostile and treat him as a declared enemy. It is announced that to the British ultimatum has been received from the Ameer of Afghanistan and orders have been accordingly sent to India for the troops to advance.

Forced into War.

LONDON, Nov 21. The Cabinet council which was held yesterday adjourned after a protracted session until Thursday, but the decision arrived at dispels all doubts, The Standard says, that "we are consequently engaged in a war with Afghanistan which has been forced upon us by Russian intrigue, and the evil effects of our past policy."

The Advance Probably Begun.

The Post's leading editorial says: When it became evident some days ago that the Ameer intended to persevere in his disdainful reticence, the frontier commanders received orders to be in readiness to commence operations this morning. (Thursday.) The simple duty of Wednesday's Cabinet council was to learn whether any change in the Ameer's attitude will necessitate alteration in these instructions. As the Ameer has sent no reply it only remained for the troops to execute the original orders. The advance has probably begun.

The Times on the Situation.

The Times' leader says: The ultimatum has been refused. The result, we believe, is that the issue has now been left in Lord Lytton's hands. We may expect to hear in a few hours what action he intends to take. He will probably occupy the Khyber and Khurum passes and make some advance with the Quettah column.

GREAT BRITAIN.

The Clyde Shipbuilders and the Workmen.

NEW YORK, Nov. 20. A Glasgow special says: The Clyde shipbuilders, at their meeting just held, have decided that unless the men now on a strike resume work immediately they will lock out all iron-workers employed by them in the different shipbuilding yards. This will affect thousands of workmen. Many of them have of late only been gaining a precarious livelihood. The workmen at large stigmatize this step on the part of the employers as nothing more nor less than tyranny, which may yet lead to violence.

Great Distress.

LONDON, Nov. 20. Appalling distress and destitution exists among the mechanics and laborers of Sheffield in consequence of business depression. Hundreds are living in tenements without clothing or furniture which they are forced to sell to procure food. They are without fuel and dependent on charity of neighbors subsistence. The Mayor has called a public meeting to devise relief.

THE BEST PLAN.

The most profitable plan for operating in stocks is that of uniting capital of various sums by combining or pooling the orders of thousands of customers and using them as one mighty whole, which has been done so successfully by Messrs. Lawrence & Co., Bankers, 57 Exchange Place, N. Y. City. By this co-operative system each investor is placed on an equal footing with the largest operator, and profits are divided pro rata among shareholders every 30 days. An investment of $10 would pay $50, making 5 per cent. on the stock during the month. $25 would pay $150 making 6 per cent.; $100 would make $1,000, a profit of 10 per cent., and so on according to the market. Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper, June 29th, says: "The Combination Method of operating in stocks is the most successful ever adopted." New York Independent, Sept. 12th, says: "The Combination System is founded upon correct business principles, and no person need be without an income while it is kept working by Messrs. Lawrence & Co." The firm's new circular (copyrighted and sent free) contains "Two unerring rules for success in stock operations," and explains everything. All kinds of Stocks and Bonds wanted at highest market price. New Government Loan supplied on best terms. For information address Lawrence & Co., Bankers, 57 Exchange Place, N. Y. City.

L. Boardman, Augusta. There was a full attendance of the Board at these meetings.

COPPER MINE. A Bluehill correspondent of the Lewiston Journal writes: "Mr. Hanson Gregory Jr., has recently purchased the "Douglass" mine, of Bluehill, of Mr. Sylvanus. He pays a high price, but has a crew of men at work some ten feet below the surface, and says that in one day, the 15th inst, they took out at least $175 worth of copper! He is a miner of large experience, being now engaged in profitable copper mining in New Hampshire, but says he has never seen so good a showing of copper so near the surface as here. A visit to the mines will convince the most skeptical of the excellent prospect. Prof. Bartlett of Portland has recently been here, and is surprised at the richness of the ore."

RAILROAD MEN IN CONVENTION. The Argus says: "A number of prominent railroad officials held a meeting at the Falmouth Monday evening. The party consisted of President Geo. E. B. Jackson, of the Maine Central; President John T. Berry, Superintendent C. A. Coombs and Directors Francis Cobb and Edwin Reed, of the Knox & Lincoln; President A. P. Rockwell of the Eastern; and President N. G. White and General Superintendent Jas. T. Furber of the Boston & Maine; Mr. Milliken, of the Portland, Bangor & Machias Steamboat line, and Mr. Lindsey, formerly proprietor of the steamer Ulysses. The object of the meeting was to make arrangements for the Mt. Desert business next season, but after a session until a late hour no result was reached."

A NARROW ESCAPE. Mr. Charles C. Prescott's daughter, Edith, had a very narrow escape from being seriously injured yesterday morning. In company with several of her playments she was on her way down town, and while crossing from Patten's to Ramsdell & Neal's corner, she was run over by one of Spratt's livery teams. The team was coming down State street hill, and the driver endeavored to prevent the accident, but being in a covered carriage and having two children with him, he was unable to stear clear of them all and the horse struck the little girl and the carriage passed over her. Several gentlemen who witnessed the accident rushed to the child's assistance, thinking that she had been badly injured. She was taken in Patten's drug store, and afterwards to her home on Grove street, when, after the mud had been removed, it was ascertained that she had escaped uninjured.

SUICIDE AT BUCKSPORT. Our correspondent at Bucksport informs us that the citizens of that place were thrown into quite a state of excitement yesterday, by the announcement that a young woman named Miss Mary Francis Robbins, had committed suicide. It seems that a young man in that place has been paying her marked attention for several years and sometime since, she learned that he was also bestowing his attentions upon another young lady in the town. He firmly denied the report and she believed him, until some few months since, when his marriage with the second young lady was publicly announced. Since that time she has been very despondent and finally made up her mind to commit this rash act, and on Tuesday she got a boy to procure an ounce of the oil of cedar for her. On Tuesday evening several of her friends assembled at her house, where they remained until about ten o'clock, and two hours hours later she was found dead in her room.

A FINE COLT. Mr. P. C. Baker of Orrington, raised this season a colt that weighed, when five months old, five hundred and fifty pounds. The colt was sired by Young Lord Clyde, owned by Mr. H. W. Chase of this city. Mr. Baker, who is a thorough going farmer and stock raiser, would like to hear of some one who has done better. He had a mate for this colt sired by the same horse and in every respect as good, and so much alike that it was impossible to tell one from the other; but unfortunately, through an accident, he lost him. The father of these colts is a half blooded Clydesdale, dark bay, stands 16¼ hands high, weighs twenty hundred pounds, and his style and elasticity of movement combined with his weight, would be hard to excel. He was, with other horses, shipped from Logan county, Ill., two years ago, by Mr. Chase, and judging from the horse and the many promising colts in the last two years, he bids fair to occupy a prominent place among stock horses.

CENSURING THE WRONG PARTY. The Lewiston Journal says: "A Bangor correspondent who is in the postal service, notices an article in Chase's Chronicle charging the postal department with dereliction of duty, because some of the mailed papers of the Chronicle fail to reach their destination. The correspondent says that Friday night, 15th instant, on his way west from Augusta, he encountered a bag of Chronicles (single seals), wrapped in common newspaper. He carefully examined the addresses and found forty errors. Four papers were not addressed at all and thirty-five did not name the State although addressed to persons residing in towns outside of Maine. One package of twenty papers had no State, and of course the postal clerk had to guess at it. Our correspondent justly intimates that it would be in better taste for the Chronicle-maker to do a little scolding on his own premises before he pulls the ears of the postal clerks. Our own experience with our own large mail, is that the postal service in the main is wonderfully faithful and correct."

A CHASE AFTER A DEAD PIG. A Frenchman named Frank Soney had a lively chase after a dead porker yesterday afternoon. During the past season he has been fattening a porker and as the animal could tip the scales at about four hundred pounds, he made up his mind Tuesday, that he would have it killed and salted. He called at the house of a man who does that kind of work, but not finding him at home, he called at the house of another man who agreed to do the job at one o'clock yesterday afternoon. He returned from his work at noon yesterday, when he was informed by his wife that a man called at nine o clock that morning, killed the pig and hauled it away to dress. As this was not according to agreement, Soney started out on the war path and called at the house of the man who had contracted to take the porker's life. This individual was greatly surprised when he learned that some one had taken the job off of his hands, and Soney, fearing he was going to lose his winter's supply of pork, started for the station house where he told his story. After considerable running around it was ascertained that the man at whose house he called first, had mistrusted what was wanted of him and went up and slaughtered the pig.

The Primary Cause of a Distant Symptom.

Nervousness is rarely a disease in itself inherent, but is the lineal offspring of dyspepsia, in a majority of cases. The nervous disturbance is at first trifling, but ultimately its parent so undermines the general health as to produce consequences very threatening to that great nervous centre, the brain. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is the most powerful medicinal opponent of the ravages of indigestion, and protects the nervous system from them. The tremors, the unnatural anxiety, the headaches, the sleeplessness and loss of appetite which characterizes digestive irregularity and weakness, and which are almost invariably accompanied by an uncertain condition of the bowels and inactivity of the liver, are all eradicated by this matchless corrective, and when nervousness does not proceed from the cause designated, it affords most grateful relief.

SORROW.

No morn has broken destitute of sorrow,
No night but brings some weary heart relief,
No day but dolls us longing for the morrow,
There must be grief!

No happy eyes, unstained by fire of weeping,
Can grasping death with icy fingers close,
No life but sees the gloom of sadness creeping
Before repose

Soft dew of tears on graves is ever falling
With tears are little infants kissed to life
In tears, strong men and women are recalling
A broken life!

To young and old life's bitterness is meted,
And since to children's hearts its fibres cling
'Tis best in early life to have defeated
Grief's sharpest sting!

THE CHARCOAL-BURNER

I

A strange race are the charcoal burners living apart among the woods, in huts roughly put together and rarely mixing with the denizens of town or village, they seem, by their wild ways, to be a link between the old savage times and the modern days of civilization. They are a solitary people, pursuing their calling in the loneliest glades of the forest, never seeking to associate with others, never seeking to change their manners and modes of living, never assimilating themselves to the refinements, the religions or the culture around them. Some say they never go to mass and all their baptisms, (if any) and all their marriages are settled by laws of their own. At all events, they marry only among themselves, the reason, perhaps, being that to the rest of the community they are pariahs with whom a man would be ashamed to connect himself.

Strange tales have reached my ears of the savagery of the charcoal burners.

"Their children are as untaught and as wild as young wolves," said one. "They attend no school, they go to no church."

"Their dwellings are foul with smoke and dirt," cried another. "No doors, no windows, no chimney, and as to water, they can't understand the use of it. In fact they live like savages."

"And why do they live such a strange life?" I asked.

"I don't know. They have always done it. They lived like that hundreds of years ago and they live so still."

It was the answer I invariably received. No one seemed to possess any deeper knowledge, so I was fain to put up with the scanty information I could get. And indeed this is all I know of the charcoal burners to this day, for their huts lay so far in the recesses of the forest that I never found time to pay them a visit and prove by the evidence of my own senses, whether the strange tales told me of their savage lives were too highly colored or not.

I could fancy that in the lonely glades of that great wooded belt which stretches into the Black Forest a race of men might grow savage, and finding themselves despised and shunned, they might learn on their side to contemn the civilization and the religion of those who scorned them. But would this make them wicked? Surely in the green quiet cloisters of wood, in the long leafy naves of this great temple in its shadowy and arched choir, the human soul was more attuned to worship the holy and the pure than in the city, where sin walks unabashed, insolent and loud.

"You wanted to see a charcoal burner," said Madame Rodiere to me one morning. "Well here comes the charette of Pierre, the charcoal burner. Now you can talk to him, Monsieur, if you will."

I ran out into the road, and followed the wheels of the cart till they stopped at the grocer's door. Then a tall spare man with iron gray hair sprang to the ground and entered the shop. His face was hard and bronzed, the features good, the eyes piercing, the cheeks thin and hollow, with mouth firm and grave to such a strange degree that it seemed never to have smiled. It was this which gave to his face a peculiarity so remarkable that I could not refrain from watching him almost rudely. He took no notice, however, of my steady gaze, as with a singular display of memory he enumerated the puzzling varieties of articles required by the community whose commissioner he was. For all things he had a pile of little packets, each containing money, and to my surprise he made no single error, either in the reckoning of this, or in the name of the person to whom it belonged.

"I am astonished you should trouble yourself to remember all this," said I. "Why not write it down?"

"Monsieur, I cannot write," returned the charcoal burner gravely. "We cannot learn writing in the woods, we must trust to our memories. The memory of a charcoal burner is good," he added.

He said this with a sudden flash in his fierce eye, while there fell on his face an expression of hate and suffering indescribable.

"That man has a history and a strange one," I thought, as I watched the shadow pass over his hard features and leave them as composed and passionless as before.

"How old should you think Pierre to be?" asked the grocer in his usual mincing voice, as the charcoal burner strode away to help Adolphe, the shopman, stow the packages in the cart.

"I should think him between fifty and sixty," I answered.

The grocer chuckled with delight at this reply.

"Why, ten years ago he could ... there was not a handsomer young fellow in the woods than Pierre. At the utmost he is not more than thirty four."

I was so astonished that I could only turn my eyes in bewilderment on the worn hard face, whose aged lines of care and sorrow seemed so utterly to belie the grocer's word.

"Ah," said he, "you may well look surprised, but I tell you the exact truth. That man has not seen more than thirty-four years of life—a hard, strange life certainly, and it has made him what you see him. In fact he has never smiled since."

"Since what? since when?" I cried half angrily.

"Since the murder. Of course you know all this story, Monsieur?"

"Of course I know nothing," I answered. "You Ardennais are the most aggravating people upon earth. No sooner does a stranger come among you than you talk to him as if he knew all your village gossip since the days of St. Hubert."

"Monsieur is half right there. But I thought Madame Rodiere had told you the story of poor Elmire's death," said the grocer.

"I would rather hear it from Pierre himself," said I, "if as I suppose the story is connected with him."

"Hush, here he comes! Pierre," cried the grocer, "will you take a glass of peket?"*

"Monsieur knows I never drink aught but water," returned the man, taking up his last packets from the counter.

"This gentleman prays you to drink a health with him, and tell him how it is your face looks so old when you are still young. Why, Pierre, he has just guessed your age at sixty."

We all smiled except the charcoal burner, whose harsh face seemed to grow a shade older as he listened.

"I am little used to talking," he said, "especially in houses. Out in the woods I might tell the story, if the gentleman is not afraid to come."

"I am not afraid, Pierre," I answered.

"We charcoal burners are a wild lot," he continued, "and I should be sorry to tell a tale before them, but anywhere beneath the trees in quiet, I might, in my rough way, draw you out a shadow of the truth—only a shadow at the best, for words don't tell sufferings."

"I will meet you where you please," I cried, eagerly. "The lonelier the spot the better I shall like it."

"I'm watching a pile of burning wood in the forest, near the old cross in the Bastoigne road," he answered, "and if any day for a week to come, Monsieur will travel that way and blow his horn,† I shall hear it, and I will make my way through the trees, and bring you to the spot."

"I will come on Monday, Pierre," I said, "at two o'clock."

He nodded to me without a word more, and departed.

II.

Down in a little glen, where the trees grew thick and tall, shutting out the sun, and the loneliness was so intense that the voice grew hushed, and the heart seemed stirred with memories of other worlds, I heard in broken phrases, uncouth and roughly spoken, the story of Pierre, the charcoal-burner.

"I am the poorest man alive," said Pierre, "in all the world there's none poorer or rougher. In saying I am a charcoal-burner, all's said in one word. I'm an outcast of the woods, and I know it, and I rarely trouble a town; for there I feel myself alone—not tuned, as it were, to the tone about me. I love the wild free woods, and she loved the forest, too, with all her heart. There wasn't a sound in it she couldn't tell and interpret, from the song of the nightingale down to the weakest cry of the small insect on the grass.

People said she was ignorant. She couldn't read and write, she couldn't say a 'Pater' in Latin to save her life, she was untaught and ignorant as a bird or a beast. I've heard the town-folks say this of her often, and I've smiled and wished they were out in the woods with us for awhile. Ignorant, was she? Why, she knew every tree that grows, she knew every herb that springs out of the grass. She could tell you where the freshest water ran, and the greenest cresses grew. There wasn't a healing leaf in all the woods that she hadn't learned to understand, and if you did but hurt your finger, she would spring aside, and come back smiling, with some sweet-smelling remedy in her pretty hand.

"Then the flowers. There was no eye like hers for flowers. She knew them all, and never gathered them as town folks do, to throw away when they faded. No, she dried them in the sun, and kept them for the sick in winter. The rose and the gillyflower for colds, the lime blossoms for fever. Ah, what a store she gathered every summer! And with what wreaths and posies she decked out our little hut!

"We were brought up together, sir, so I know what I am saying when I tell you she was not ignorant. But like us all, she had no town-learning, her only books were the forest and the sky, but out of these she got a wisdom that might have put learned men to shame."

Pierre paused here, and his eyes looked out far away beneath the green glades, as though he saw there some sight that filled his soul with the unutterable longing of sorrow.

"Down there at that old gnarled tree she used to meet me every day. Sometimes, at sunset, I think I see her still, but I know it's only fancy. I am so afraid, as you listen to my poor talk, you will think because she was a charcoal burner's daughter, and because she loved such a man as I am, that her ways must have been like my ways, but I tell you, no. It is not in me to have such thoughts as she had, nor to put them in such noble words. And it is not in me to learn things from sky and herb and tree that she learned. Every little leaf and flower cup told her its secret and the stars, as they looked down on her, breathed into her soul such thoughts of infinite love, of an ever yearning pity and eternal glory, that my heart would stop beating as I listened to her.

"Was she beautiful? you ask. I don't know, sir. Her face was not like any face I have heard called beautiful in towns and villages, but once, in a picture, I saw a face like hers. It was the picture of a woman in the wilderness, weeping as she lay on the ground with her hand resting on a book."

"Mary Magdalen," said I.

"It might be, sir. But her name you know was Elmire. I've made the woods ring with her name many a time in the old joyous days, and in the sad times since, I've whispered it to myself in prison in such bitterness as few men know. You wouldn't think, sir, that she was a girl whom a wicked man would dare to love in a wicked way. And yet that misery came to her. If you were to climb to the top of that green knoll, and look westward over the sloping trees, you'd see the smoke of the village where he lived. I never go there now. The sight of the place would set my brain on fire.

"He was a farmer's son, well to do, vile and cruel as a wolf, but clever, so the schoolmaster said, and rich, as all the world knew.

"He crept into the wood, and came upon her in lonely places and insulted her with hot words of passion. Or he stole upon her unawares, when she sat at work beneath the tree, and fawned and cringed for a word from her. Or he threatened, and frightened her when she came into the village for flax and wool. All things always he tried, and he gained only her quiet scorn, and her untold loathing.

"We wild children of the woods have an instinct which warns us of a hurtful reptile, or a poisonous plant, and thus we avoid them, though we know not their names and though we could not, in our ignorance, utter our reason for our fear. So with her, she hated this man from the first, and one day, in our wanderings, she told me she thought he would kill her, as a snake or a wolf might when hungry or angry.

"I laughed at this. "He dare not lift his hand against thee, Elmire," I said. "He is a coward, and he knows that I should kill him if he did but touch thee."

"Indeed my anger burned so fiercely against the villain that Elmire had with difficulty kept us from blows. But for her prayer and tears, I would have rid her path of him long before. There was another hindrance, too—her father. With him lay all the root of this misery. He was a drunkard, and for drink he was willing to sell even his daughter. He was lost, swallowed up in that one vice, reason, affection, conscience, all drowned in it.

"Look yonder, Monsieur, down that deep, narrow pathway where the trees arch overhead so closely that the sunlight does but sprinkle sparingly the ground beneath. Do you see high up on the tallest tree, a white cross cut in the bark? That sign, cut by these hands, is a memorial of the foulest murder ever done in this land. There is not a lonelier spot in all the forest than the little glade that lies beneath that tree. It is Autumn now, and the leaves are pare, but in full Summer the tiny pathway you see yonder is covered up with foliage and long grass so rank that only a forester's eye can trace the track, and scarce any but a forester's foot can follow it as it winds down over crags and precipices into the solitary dell below. In that dell the undergrowth is cleared away, giving place to softest turf, and through the midst there runs a little rill, trickling musically all the day. Lilies of the valley, forget-me-nots, and wild roses edge the stream, with many other herbs and flowers for which my rude, unlettered tongue can find no name. But Elmire knew them all, and she came hither constantly in Summer time to cull and dry them in the sun. Except for that tall solitary tree, the dell is open to the sky, and though it is so small that a man may pace it from end to end within a minute, yet here he seems to breathe a freer, fresher air as, looking upward, no shadow falls between the face and the blue heavens.

"Think of the loneliness of this spot, where a pebble flung into the stream startles the ear, and the sound of a footfall comes like a wonder. If a shriek of agony—if a cry for help went up to heaven from this lone place, no human ear could hear it. If some dreadful deed were done here, no human eye would witness it—no tongue could ever testify against the evil-doer.

"Ten years ago, one August day, when the sun was blazing in the sky, I crept away from my fellows, and bent my steps toward this dell. All the hot morning, as I worked, I had thought of it longingly, and the sound of the cool rill trickling over the pebbles had haunted me, whispering of rest and freshness. So, while the others betook themselves to their siesta beneath the trees, I crept away, and wound round through the wood, following the music of the brook.

"Somehow it seemed to me that I did not step through the underwood but that I broke through it suddenly, like a man would in a dream, and then I saw Elmire lying on the grass, in the glare of the noon-day sun. It did not come upon me gradually that she was dead. I knew it like a flash, even as I beheld her.

"The place was silent as a wrecked ship in mid-ocean might be. Not a leaf stirred in the hot air, not a blade of grass quivered as I stood looking at her. I saw she was dead, yet I would not see it—I would not believe it. So, as the color came slowly back to my face, as my heart began to beat again, I cried softly:

"'Elmire! Elmire!'

"There was no answer—no movement in the prostrate form, and then I knew the silence was the silence of death.

"I sprang across the brook and lifted her in my arms. I do not tell you what I felt. As I have said before, suffering has no words. The tongue cannot betray the agony of the soul, strive as it may. No; it cannot even utter the pangs of the flesh; true grief and pain are silent, and the woes that chatter of their smart are nothing.

"She was stabbed before she died. I could see the blood upon the grass. I could see the places where she had knelt and begged for mercy. And from her knees she had fallen on her face, and so I found her—her hands clasped as she had lifted them in prayer and her fair face pressed against the ground.

"'It is Luc Leroy,' I said, as I laid her back gently on the grass.

"I had not cried aloud for help, I had not even thought of it. Whether the horror of the scene, or the instinctive knowledge of the uselessness of cries in this lone place kept me silent, I know not. Neither do I know how long I sat with my dead love in my arms, before I roused myself and rushed from that dreary sunshine into the dim wood.

"I came up this rugged path a madman, blind with grief and rage. Had I met Luc Leroy then, I should have torn his heart out. I ran on toward the place where I left my companions, but before I reached them, I met her father staggering through the wood stupidly drunken. He stared at me with bleared eyes and saw the blood on me.

"'What's this?' he said eagerly. Seeing him helpless, I would have passed him in a silence that was half pity, half disgust; but the miserable man seized me and shrieked aloud for help.

"'Let me pass on!' I cried, 'your daughter lies murdered in the dell.'

"The sense left in him was so little that he caught at the words wrong.

"'Do you dare to own that you have killed her?' he shrieked. 'Help, comrades! help!'

"We were struggling together when they came running to the spot, and as they lifted me my ghastly looks might well make them deem me guilty.

"'He comes red from the deed!' cried Pere Martin, shaking with terror. 'Look at his hands!'

"The old man's drowned senses were so bewildered now, that he struck at me frantically, crying aloud the while on his daughter's name and raving on her beauty and goodness.

"'He was jealous—this assassin here—he knows a rich man wanted my child. Luc Leroy would have made her his wife.'

"Meanwhile I fought with my fellow-workmen like a maniac. I strove to speak to them. I strove to tell them all that had happened to me, but my reason had gone wild, my heart was breaking, my lips were cracked, my voice only came in gasping sobs.

"'Elmire, Elmire! They say I killed thee! I, who loved thee better than my life. Are you mad, comrades? I tell you Luc Leroy is the man.'

"'Luc has just left me, he has been in my hut with me all the morning,' said Pere Martin.

"As he said this, I flung myself on the ground in utter despair, and suffered silently the cords with which my comrades bound me. Then some stayed to watch me, while others went to the village to apprise the authorities of the murder.

"You perceive, Monsieur, that when the gendarmes arrived they were necessarily already prejudiced against me, therefore my bearing and my words all seemed to them proofs of guilt. But a more certain proof was now forthcoming. Down in the dell, near the body of the murdered girl, they found a knife—my knife, it was covered with blood, and had evidently been the weapon used against her.

"As the men spoke of this, I remembered, with a ghastly sinking of my heart, that I had lost this knife a day or two before in the wood, but I had mentioned this loss only to Elmire and her father. I appealed to him, now, reminding him of this fact, but he answered me angrily that he remembered nothing of it.

"Then I sank into sullen despair, and went silently to prison."
